

Dr. Robert Luo, MD, MPH is a diagnostics advisor and board-certified pathologist with expertise in clinical microbiology, virology, diagnostics development, and global health. Dr. Luo received his BA from Harvard University and his MD and MPH from Johns Hopkins University, before completing his residency training in anatomic and clinical pathology at Stanford University. He has worked in academia, public health, and industry, most recently as a Medical Director at Roche Molecular Diagnostics. His experience in infectious disease diagnostics spans the last 15 years across a variety of settings, including the US, South Africa, China, Kenya, India, Peru, Vietnam, Malaysia, and North Korea.

