

Dr David Lye is a senior consultant at the Institute of Infectious Diseases and Epidemiology, Communicable Diseases Centre, and Department of Infectious Diseases, Tan Tock Seng Hospital, Singapore, where he leads antimicrobial stewardship programme, oversees the training and education unit, runs an active clinical dengue research programme as co-principal investigator of STOP-dengue, and manages the Singapore Infectious Disease Clinical Research Network (SCRN).

He is adjunct associate professor with Yong Loo Lin School of Medicine, National University of Singapore.

His professional leadership roles include: elected council member of the Academy of Medicine, Singapore; vice-president of the College of Physicians, Singapore; president of the Society for Infectious Diseases (Singapore); and chairperson of the National Antimicrobial Stewardship Expert Panel, Ministry of Health. He serves on the executive committee of Action for AIDS, a non-governmental organisation in Singapore.

He graduated from the University of Melbourne, completed his internal medicine training at St Vincent's Hospital, Melbourne, and undertook his infectious disease training at Westmead Hospital, Sydney, and Barwon Health, Victoria, Australia.

His research productivity includes 101 peer-reviewed publications and 103 conference abstracts on dengue and other emerging infections, antimicrobial pharmacotherapy and resistance, and influenza; his H-index is 21 (March 2015). He serves as an associate editor, BMC Infectious Diseases, and is on the editorial board of Journal of Global Antimicrobial Resistance.